Caught in the Web: Fourth Edition

The internet is an integral part of all our lives and the age at which children are accessing the internet through a variety of devices is reducing as younger children become more technically aware. All interaction with our community carries risk and young children can be ill equipped to deal with the particular dangers that present themselves on a virtual level.

Caught in the Web deals with issues such as bullying, personal security, gaming and social media and helps children at a young age make good decisions based upon sound educational advice.

Our fourth edition teaches the children how to react to cyber bullies and what to do if something happens.

In Caught in the Web, Barney helps Echo and his friends to face the potential dangers of going online. With the help of Tom Stoat the Woodland Wizard, Barney shows his friends how to stay safe on the internet and social networking sites and also the effect cyberbullying has on others.

Caught in the Web is supported by the UK Council for Child Internet Safety (UKCCIS) and The Child Exploitation and Online Protection Centre (CEOP)

The book is punctuated by activities that develop the learning objectives for the children.

Caught in the Web is a fun and interactive support to children's citizenship education in primary schools.

Barney Says...

if you feel as though you are being bullied online or you see anyone being bullied don't just sit back and watch, tell someone!

The best idea is to tell your parent, guardian or your teacher the first time it happens - or at least as quickly as possible.

The best way to deal with a bully is to REPORT THEM and then IGNORE THEM

Block the bully from all of your social media platforms. Block them on your mobile phone and then make sure you take them off your gaming console player list.

Don't retaliate in any way that's angry, offensive or threatening - you might feel sad, alone or even afraid, but if you tell your parent, guardian or teacher what's happened straight away you'll feel better.
